Using a Citation to Find an Assigned Article.

Here are four ways to locate an article that has been assigned to you:

   a. If the article is in PubMed, it should pop up.
   b. To see if we have it full-text, hover your mouse over any icons on the side that say things like “High Wire” or “Full Text”. Look for the hover to reveal “Campbell University.”
      i. Click the icon to see what we have.

2. Go to the medical library home page, click the article tab, and copy/paste/type the article title.
   a. If it is owned, you will see the holdings.

3. If you still aren’t finding it, try Single Citation Matcher in PubMed.
   a. Go to the PubMed home page.
   b. Click Single Citation Matcher.
   c. Type in everything you know about the article (Journal title, author(s), article title, volume, etc.)

4. You can always paste the article title into Google. You will likely NOT find it full text, but you may be able to gather more information that will help you track it down.
